The University of Bedfordshire

At the University of Bedfordshire, we attract the kind of students organisations compete to employ. We are proud of our student body – an international network of creative self-starters from over 100 countries.

Our links with over 3,000 organisations provide unrivalled opportunities for our students to acquire practical workplace skills, helping us to equip students with a balance of critical and creative thinking they can use to not only find employment but build careers.

The quality of our courses has been validated by the Quality Assurance Agency for Higher Education, and we have received a commendation for our work to enhance student learning opportunities.

We are a local university with a global network of partnerships across the UK, Europe, Middle East, South Asia and East Asia. We contribute £300 million annually to the Luton and Bedfordshire economy, providing value to business through support to access funding opportunities, comprehensive accredited CPD provision and bespoke consultancy.

Our research is rooted in real-world problems in industry and public services, with particular strengths in Health; Environmental Sciences; Computer Science; Business, Management and Law; Social Work and Social Policy; Education; Sport and Exercise Science; Leisure and Tourism; English Language and Literature; Music, Drama and Performing Arts and Media and Communication. Almost half our research has been judged internationally excellent or world-leading in the UK-wide Research Excellence Framework.

We are committed to investment in the infrastructure and cultural life of Luton, from the refurbished Alexon building at the gateway to Luton's creative quarter, to our new £46 million state-of-the-art University Library.

We have broken ground on a new £37 million building devoted to Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics learning and research, scheduled to open in 2019.

A recent Arts Council grant enables us to promote and develop enterprise in the creative arts in Luton.
